people in the Alzheimer's wing of a local old folks amazing to see how they responded when i ming the ukulele doing some songs from the earlier days of the twentieth century...some of them sang along at parts, or clapped their hands, one woman even got up and danced around a bit with her walker. It was another humbling and incredible learning experience of the power of music to change people's lives. This is why I make music for everybody...because music is for everybody.

The first two shows of 2014 are January 24th at Somewhere Else in Princeton, and the 25th at the Abbey Pub in Chicago.

Looking to travel a bit more to share the music this year, so where would you like to see a show at?

Let me know! 1

This drawing by Bryan Hartnett is going to be printed on some shirts very soon. Let me know if you'd like one! It's cold out, you need to wear some clothes if you're venturing into the arctic tundra.

Thanks to all 614 of you who have opened your heart enough to connect through this digital medium of communication. Because of some greed and politic issues, only a handful of you will likely see this posting, but anyway, the next two upcoming shows are Saturday, October 11th at Fitzgeralds in Princeton, and Friday, October 16th at Festivities Unlimited in Ottawa (+many other great bands!) If you've made it this far in reading this post, congratulations, and give yourself a pat on the back, because your attention span works harder than about 90% of the population! Further details will be shared about these upcoming performances as time goes marching day by day into the future, hurrah!

"Do people live in circles today? No. They live in boxes. They wake up every morning in a box of their bedrooms because a box next to them started making beeping noises to tell them it was time to get up. They eat their breakfast out of a box and then they throw that box away into another box. Then they leave the box where they live and get into another box with wheels and drive to work, which is just another big box broken into little cubicle boxes where a bunch of people sp... See More
